TO ANSWER the question so often asked by high school students, "Have you a good book on . . . ?" nearly 500 books of recent fiction, (1930-37 for the most part) have been listed in a Subject index to high school fiction.

Part I of the Index is an alphabetical list of subjects, each subject followed by the numbers of the entries in Part II which deal with that particular subject.

Part II of the Index is an alphabetical list of authors and titles, numbered consecutively. A brief, informal annotation indicates the type of story. Subject headings, chosen for their interest to high school students, are given for each book. Preceding the author's name is a suggestion as to the grade level in which the book might be useful. A book marked "js," for example, might be used in both junior and senior high school, depending on the ability and interest of the student. Entries preceded by "s" are, in general, suitable for senior high school. One difficulty in the assigning of grade levels arises when the style of the book is juvenile while the subject is attractive to more mature students. Books in this category have been marked "js."

Many difficulties in selection, grading, and choice of subject headings were encountered and advice was sought on these points. The manuscript was examined critically by three eminent school librarians selected by the American library association. Their comments and criticisms were submitted to a group of 20 local school librarians and to an informal advisory group consisting of:

Miss Mary Bacon, Librarian, North central high school, Spokane, Washington; Miss Hope Potter, Librarian, Senior high school, South Pasadena, California; Miss Alice Stoeltzing, Librarian, Lindbergh junior high school, Long Beach, California; Miss Miriam Snow, Librarian, Children's literature, State normal school, Bellingham, Washington.

I am indebted to all of these librarians for the help they have given. It is hoped that the resulting tool, though far from a perfect one, will prove to be serviceable.
